

Welcome to W.A.N.Y.B. village. A few weeks ago, more than 20 individuals decided to leave their homeland in search of a new land that they could call their own. They call themselves the We Are Not Yogurt Bottle people, or W.A.N.Y.B.s for short.

The leader of the group, Cindy, says “We were all just tired of where we were living. People just kept calling us yogurt bottles. We’re looking for a place where people can look beyond our yogurt bottle origins and accept that we are real people with our own hopes and dreams.”

The Tweedsmuir garden has graciously offered the W.A.N.Y.B.s a space to live while they work on a more long-term housing plan. A team of designers and builders has worked tirelessly to create a variety of structures to house the W.A.N.Y.B.s. However, it remains to be seen if the homes will be strong enough to protect the W.A.N.Y.B.s through the harsh winter expected in the garden.
